How Land for Anandanagar was obtained

In 1955, Ánandamárga Pracárika Saṁgha was formally established at Jamalpur, Bihar. On the very first day, Father said this about the agenda for the Saṁgha ----“Religious practice should not be confined within blind superstition and sectarianism. It should be spread among all men.” He instructed his devotees and disciples that in their particular areas they should pray and meditate together once a week, preferably on Sundays. This collective prayer and meditation is to be called Dharmacakra. He added: ----- “Understand the need of men and build a social order accordingly. Do not do anything to fulfill your needs or the needs of your small group. For any effort made with a restricted view without a Bráhmica view will not endure. Look at every living being with real love and sympathy”. He also ordered,: “Do not waste time. Form District Committees in various districts immediately.” The venue for collective prayer and meditation by devotees on a particular day of week is called Jágriti. At the time of making of Jágriti at Jamalpur, Father told Áchárya Kuldiipji: --- In future you will have to engage yourself in the Yajña of action over a wider area. There will be a university, colleges, schools, hospitals and much service –oriented activity. People from all over the world will come to watch your Yajñá of action.

In 1962, Father called several followers and told them: “The work of the Saṁgha is spreading fast. It is no longer possible to confine your activities within the limits of a small place like Jamalpur. A wide stretch of land is required to give shape to the ideals of Ánandamárga. Find a larger expanse of land.” (to be continued)
